

SATIVEX

Posted by whitewolfe - 26 Jun 2006 15:55

hello to all!

hope everyone is looking at a "nice" day. 🌞

I am watching this new drug with hopeful eyes. has anyone here tried it yet? if so where are you from and most important how is it working for you?

I have never done the "illegal" version but i have had days and days where i would have tried ANYTHING! 🌞
I am seeing that we now have it in stage III here in USA but can't find out where they are getting the patients from as I'd love to volunteer for some relief.

does anyone know also of how the generic Zonegram (zonisamide) capsules tend to be working? i am not getting good neuropathic pain results off of mine and had decreasing rates on the zonegram after two years. Is this normal? what is next? I am losing weight due to the pain and simply don't feel even as good as i use to. any ideas anyone?

thanks!

=====

Re:Cannabis

Posted by Kim - 05 Jul 2007 06:23

Just heard yesterday trials are being offered to pain patients at the Walton Centre in Liverpool for the first time. Going to follow this one up as previously they only dealt with MS patients. Nice one if you have a popular (well known self inflicted) condition!

Cinic of the Day

🙄

=====

Re:SATIVEX

Posted by Kim - 07 Sep 2007 00:40

Latest press release

www.gwpharm.co.uk/news_press_releases.asp

CNS and cancer patients

Canada ok if you have cancer

Europe withdrawn application and will re-submit in 2008

=====

Re:SATIVEX

Posted by Kim - 22 Apr 2009 17:06

Thanks again Helen

=====

Re:SATIVEX

Posted by Aly - 25 Jan 2010 01:38

I have been using sativex for about 2 years now. It is not a miracle, I have to take many other pain meds. but I must say it does help especially at night to keep the myoclonus under control and seems to keep that feeling of knives being thrown at my legs randomly at night and waking me up. I had to get an exceptional drug acceptance from my insurance company as it is so expensive over 600$ a month and usually only used in Canada for MS. Kindly, Aly

=====